"To bring together the records of the past and to house them in buildings where they will be preserved for the use of men living in the future, a nation must believe in three things. It must believe in the past. It must believe in the future. It must, above all, believe in the capacity of its people so to learn from the past that they can gain in judgment for the creation of the future."

FOREWORD

As a guide to the ecclesiastical records of the churches within the Greater Detroit area, this directory furnishes an excellent opportunity for locating vital statistics which otherwise would not be made available.

This directory should be of value to many persons attempting to establish citizenship, and/or in acquiring birth certificates, which are much in demand, during the present emergency, a state of war.

PREFACE

The Vital Statistics Holdings of Church Archives in Michigan: Wayne County is part of a Nationwide series of guides being compiled by the Historical Records Survey. These guides have been undertaken as a service to the clergy and officers of religious bodies, to students of social and religious history, to the laity interested in the growth and development of religious bodies in this country, and also to various governmental agencies.

This Guide to Vital Statistics in Ecclesiastical Records, Wayne County, is a compilation establishing the vital statistics records of approximately 1,000 churches, representing more than 90 active denominations.

During the early Territorial periods the Church and local governments were closely associated; this relation was particularly adaptable to the recording of vital statistics. Frequently the only records of births and deaths in a community were kept in church registers. Today, again these records are of vital importance to the various governments of the United States, also to civilians, who in many instances are calling for them to establish their citizenship, due to the National Defense Program.

The United States Bureau of the Census and the Michigan Council of Defense, the latter a sponsor of this inventory, have requested this agency to compile the ecclesiastical vital statistic records of Michigan. This guide will serve as a basic source of vital statistics recordings not found available in public records archives. Vital Statistics Holdings by Governmental Agencies in Michigan have already been published by this Survey.

In determining the identity of the churches and other organizations, we have accepted the status and affiliations claimed by responsible officials in charge of them. The framework of presentation is that of the United States Census of Religious Bodies. Acknowledgment of our appreciation is made to the clergy, officials, and laity, who have given us their cooperation and assistance, but for lack of space we are unable to mention them individually herein.

Collection of data in the field was accomplished by project field workers, and was collated by competent and experienced editors of the Michigan Historical Records Survey. Supervision of this project was under the direction of Basil Ayres, Assistant Project Technician. This guide has been approved by the Washington office of the Historical Records Survey Projects.

EDITORIAL NOTE

Over 90 ecclesiastical denominations, representing approximately 5,000 active churches, congregations and assemblies are functioning within the State of Michigan. In most instances, these organizations have kept records of baptisms, confirmations, marriages, members, and deaths since the date of organization. It has been ascertained, however, that some of these congregations do not keep vital statistics records for one reason or another; and on other occasions, statistics have been destroyed or are otherwise unaccounted for. Consequently absence of records in this inventory occur, and only one other possible ecclesiastical source for research remains open, the denominational depositories which are listed on pages 141 through 148.

EARLY CHURCH HISTORY

Organized religious activity began in Michigan in conjunction with the arrival of the French explorers. It was the practice of the French to establish churches and colonization bases simultaneously. With the developing settlement of the area in the first years of the nineteenth century came the establishment of protestant denominations.

Roman Catholic Church

The first missionaries brought to Canada by Champlain in 1615 were the Recollets, a branch of the Franciscan Order. Champlain had extended his aid and sympathies to the Ottawa and Huron Indian tribes; these acts brought the hatred of the Iroquois Tribe and caused many difficulties in the development of New France, of which the territory of present Michigan was a part.[1] The Roman Catholic church of which he was a member and sponsor suffered as a result.

The Huron Mission, located on the Ontario Peninsula, was the first known organized church in this region. Father Joseph Le Caron, one of the Recollets, celebrated his first mass on July 12, 1615, at this mission.[2] In 1634 the Huron Mission was reopened after a period of inactivity, remaining there until 1650 when it was abandoned, due to the constant attacks of the Iroquois Indians. The remaining missionaries, with a number of their converts, retired to a village on the Island of Orleans, near Quebec.[3] It was during these 17 years that friendly Indians of the Chippewa Tribe invited missionaries to visit them, and in 1641 missionaries arrived at what is now Sault Ste. Marie.[4]

The Detroit diocese was founded March 8, 1833, under the name of "Diocese of Michigan and the Northwest." On October 6 of that year, the name was changed to "Diocese of Detroit."[5] On August 3, 1937, it was elevated to the Archdiocese of Detroit with provincial jurisdiction over the dioceses of Marquette, Grand Rapids, Lansing, and Saginaw. It extends over 5,374 square miles of territory and comprises the counties of Wayne, Macomb, Monroe, Lapeer, Lenawee, Oakland, St. Clair, and Washtenaw.[1]

The Methodist Church

Methodism in Michigan dates back to 1804 when Rev. Daniel Freeman, an elderly Methodist Episcopal preacher arrived in Detroit from Canada. Although he stayed but a short time, he made a favorable impression by his preaching.[2] Later the same year Rev. Nathan Bangs came to Detroit. He had been appointed by the New York Conference to preach in this region. Having traveled by the way of Canada, through the wilderness, he came down the shores of Lake St. Clair, visited Sandwich, and thence crossed the river to the American shore at Detroit. Here he preached his first sermon in the Council House.[3]

In covering his circuit, Rev. Mr. Bangs came to Detroit three times, and, on his third visit, finding only a few children in his audience and no one appearing to be interested in his gospel, he "shook the dust off of his feet as testimony against them and took his departure." He had also made several attempts to organize a Methodist society, but had found conditions most unsatisfactory. For 5 years thereafter no Methodist preacher visited Michigan.[4]

In 1809 Rev. William Case, a young itinerant preacher, was sent by the New York Conference to take up the work in Detroit and Michigan where Rev. Mr. Bangs had left off.[5] Case reports that he traveled about 2,500 miles and preached more than 300 sermons during his first year as a circuit rider in the Northwest Territory; and during the second and third years he covered more than 6,000 miles and delivered 600 sermons.[6]

The coming of Rev. John Monteith in 1816 resulted in the organization of the First Evangelistic Society of Detroit. The Society was intended for the worship of all faiths. Among its organizers were Governor Lewis Cass and James Abbott, a brother of Robert, who later with his brother assisted in incorporating the First Methodist Church.[1]

On March 31, 1818, the first Methodist church building in Michigan was dedicated. This occurred during the pastorate of Rev. Mr. Harmon. With the exception of the building which had been erected by the Moravians near Mt. Clemens in 1782, this was the first Protestant church to be built in Michigan. Rev. Mr. Hickox had entered a land claim for a site on the River Rouge, which accounts for the church being built there. After this church was abandoned (1825) some of the members worshipped in Detroit, while others became attached to the Huron Mission and later established the First Methodist Church in Dearbornville.[2]

Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A.

In 1816 the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church appointed Rev. John Monteith as missionary to Detroit and adjacent territory. He arrived here the 6th of June, and commenced his duties at once.[3] Through his efforts meetings of Protestant Citizens were held, which resulted in the forming of a religious organization known as the First Evangelical Society, and later as the First Protestant Society.[4] In 1817 the Society presented a petition to the Governor and Judges of the Territory of Michigan, requesting that it be granted a plot of ground for a Protestant Church site. In 1819 the society was granted a lot on Woodward Avenue, from Larned to Congress Streets.[5]

Under the leadership of Mr. Monteith the society had acquired some of the features and doctrines of a Presbyterian Church, while still remaining broad enough to retain the members of other Protestant denominations. When Monteith left Detroit in 1821 sufficient money could not be raised to pay his salary. The society had been issuing him "due-bills" which were never redeemed.[6]

Early Church History

The Society was reorganized in 1825, and adopted articles of faith which fully committed it to the Presbyterian doctrine and form of government. The First Presbyterian Church of Detroit, as it was then named, had established the Rev. Noah M. Wells as its first pastor.[1]

In 1828 the Presbyterian churches already established in Michigan, with the exception of the Ann Arbor church, were organized into the Presbytery of Detroit. There were five churches and ministers. The church at Ann Arbor probably had not been organized when the petition was drawn up at the General Assembly. The first meeting of the new Presbytery was held at the Presbyterian Church at Detroit, September 8, 1828. There were four ministers and five elders present.[2]

Between 1827 and 1834 churches were formed at Tecumseh, Ypsilanti, Northville, White Pigeon, Edwardsburgh, Saline, Richland, South Lyon, Adrian, Plymouth, Niles, and Birmingham.

In 1833 the Synod of Western Reserve, to which the Presbytery of Detroit was attached, divided the Presbytery of Detroit into three presbyteries: Monroe, St. Joseph, and Detroit.[3] Also, the synod requested the General Assembly to create a new synod to be known as the Synod of Michigan. This action was taken by the General Assembly on May 29, 1834, and the Synod of Michigan held its first meeting at Ann Arbor, September 5, 1834, with 12 ministers and 12 elders present.[4] At the time of the organization of the synod, the churches of the Presbytery of Detroit were: Detroit, Pontiac, Farmington, Northville, Plymouth, Troy, Brownstown, Dearborn, Nankin, Derby's Corners, South Lyon, Dixboro, Romeo, Bloomfield, Birmingham, Southfield, Washington, Rochester, Sault Ste. Marie, Novi, St. Clair, Grand Blanc, and Mackinac.[5]

Protestant Episcopal Church

Regular Episcopal services in Michigan actually began in 1824 with the arrival in Detroit of Rev. Fish Cadle, who had been appointed by the Foreign Missionary Society as missionary there.

Early Church History

He first held services in the Indian Council House, which was also used as a courthouse and meeting hall, the use of which had been granted to the First Evangelical Society by the governor and judges, sitting as a land board.[1] Upon the initiative of Rev. Mr. Cadle, it was decided to erect a church building. On August 10, 1827, Bishop John Henry Hobart, of New York, arrived in Detroit to lay the cornerstone for St. Paul's Church, which was later to become the Cathedral of the Diocese of Michigan. The church was consecrated by Bishop Hobart on August 24, 1828.

Under the leadership of Rev. Richard Bury, steps were taken to form a diocesan organization. As a result of these efforts, a primary convention was held in September 1832, at which time the Diocesan Constitution was drafted, and in October of the same year the Diocese of Michigan was admitted into union with the general convention of the Church.[2]

By 1874 the diocese had become large enough to create a problem for the bishop. At that time there were 90 parishes in union with the convention. During the previous year the delegates of the western part of the Lower Peninsula had brought up the subject of forming a diocese for the western part of the State. Bishop McCoskry acceded to their request, and the division was effected. Rev. George De Normandie Gillespie, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Ann Arbor, was elected first bishop of the Diocese of Western Michigan and was consecrated on February 24, 1875.[3]

Under Bishop Davies' episcopate in the Diocese of Michigan (1889-1905), an independent missionary district was established under the jurisdiction of an archdeacon for that portion of the diocese which lay in the Upper Peninsula.[4] Rev. Dean Richmond Battit, rector of St. John's Church, Saginaw, who succeeded in obtaining subscription to the amount of $2,000 to defray expenses of the archdeaconry, was appointed as the first archdeacon. After several months, Rev. Gersham Mott Williams, Dean of All Saints Protestant Episcopal Church, Milwaukee, who was also well known in Michigan, was appointed as archdeacon in September 1891. A petition was sent to Bishop Davies asking that this district be formally set aside as a separate missionary district and be established as a diocese as soon as possible. A resolution was adopted to this effect by the annual convention and a committee was appointed to prepare organizational documents. The diocese was finally organized in 1895 as the Diocese of Marquette. In 1937 its name was changed to Diocese of Northern Michigan.

The Baptist Church, Northern Convention

The first Baptist minister in Michigan was Elon Galusha, who came in 1818 as a missionary of the New York Baptist Convention. His coming resulted in the organization in Pontiac in 1822 of the first Baptist church in Michigan.[1]

The first resident preacher, Orestes Taylor, who had been licensed but not ordained, settled at Stoney Creek, Washtenaw County. Through Mr. Taylor's labors, a second Baptist church was organized at Stoney Creek in 1824, with the help of Mr. N. Lamb and his sons, S A. and R.P. Lamb. After maintaining the Gospel standards for many years the congregation divided, some of the members going to the Rochester and Mount Vernon organizations; finally the church disappeared from the lists entirely. The other two churches, Rochester and Mount Vernon, are still in existence.[2]

The first ordained Baptist minister to come to Michigan territory was Rev. Elkanah Comstock, who in 1824 became the first pastor of the Pontiac church. During his 10 years of service in Pontiac he organized a church at Troy in 1825 and another at Farmington one year later.[3]

The first organized Baptist movement in the Detroit district was begun with the establishment of the First Baptist Church in 1827. Rev. Henry Davis officiated as pastor for the first year. The original frame building was located at West Fort and Griswold Streets. In 1835 a brick structure was erected on the same site which served the congregation until 1863. The congregation later occupied a brick building at Cass and Bagley Avenues. The present building, of limestone construction, was erected by the North Baptist Church in 1910, at 8601 Woodward Avenue. In 1912 the North Church merged with the First Church, the new organization maintaining the name of the First Baptist Church of Detroit. Dr. Hillyer H. Straton has been serving as pastor since September 1938.[1]

The First Baptist Society of Dearbornville (now Dearborn) was organized on December 16, 1840, as a branch of the First Baptist Church of Detroit.[2] On July 3, 1842, the society was reorganized as an independent church. There was no regular minister for many years, and the services were held for a time in the old Presbyterian Church on Mason Street and conducted by ministers from Detroit. In 1853 a lot at the corner of Michigan and Monroe Streets (where the Wagner House is now located), was purchased. The membership never became large, and finally on April 14, 1875 a meeting was called, at which the members voted themselves letters of good standing and the society disbanded.[3]

The Congregational and Christian Church

The first Congregational church in Michigan was organized at Rochester, Oakland County, in 1827. For the first 12 or 13 years services were conducted in a log cabin located on what is now the Fred Fisher farm. The church was called the "First Congregational Church of the Town of Oakland."[4]

In 1828 another Congregational church was organized at Romeo, Macomb County.[5] Three years later the First Congregational Church of Pontiac, Oakland County,[6] was established by a group of five members.

The year 1836 is considered an important one in the history of the State, for in that year Michigan applied for statehood. At the same time the development of the lumber industry in the western section of the State brought a fresh wave of settlers to Grand Rapids, Kent County. There, in the home of Myron Hindsdill on September 18, 1836, 22 devoted people banded together to organize the Park Presbyterian Church. At another meeting, called in the Courthouse on March 26, 1839, the church reorganized as the First Congregational Church of Grand Rapids,[1] with Rev. James Ballard as its first pastor.

Another important Congregational church was founded in Royal Oak, Oakland County, in 1842. In that year, at a conference held at Jackson, on October 11, the State Association was organized.

At a conference held one year later, it was reported that 34 churches and 29 ministers were connected with the Association. The report also mentioned a total membership of 1,136 and a Sunday School enrollment of 839 pupils.[2]

The Evangelical Lutheran Church

In 1833 Emanuel Mann of Washtenaw County wrote to the Basle Evangelical Missionary Society requesting a missionary. Rev. Frederick Schmid was commissioned in the spring of that year for this service and arrived the following August. He held his first public worship on August 26th in a schoolhouse, 4 miles west of the village of Ann Arbor. At a meeting held in November, measures were taken for building a house of worship. Messrs. Mann and F. Allmendinger were chosen as trustees, and it was at once determined to build a church. A lot 2 miles west of the site of the Ann Arbor courthouse was given by Mr. Allmendinger.

This was the first German Lutheran church organized in the Territory of Michigan. The house of worship was completed in December 1833, at a cost of $265.32 and was dedicated as the Bethlehem Lutheran Church. The money was given partly by friends in Stuttgart, Germany, and in Pennsylvania. Congregations were formed about the same time in Detroit and Monroe, both served by Rev. Mr. Schmid. The first house of worship was preserved as a historic memento until 1891; at that time a photograph of it was taken and the building was destroyed.[3]

Early Church History

Evangelical and Reformed Church

In 1833 a group of German families (34 in all), who settled in the virgin forest west of Ann Arbor, organized the first German Evangelical congregation in the State, the First German Evangelical Society of Scio Township.[1] They appealed to the Basle Mission Institute for a minister. Their request was granted and on August 20th of the same year Pastor Friedrich Schmid arrived in Ann Arbor. Under his leadership the first church, an unpretentious frame building, was erected on one acre of land which was donated by F. Allmendinger, one of the two first elders of the congregation.

For a period of 3 years, from 1856 to 1859, the church belonged to the synod of the Lutheran denomination and was called the First German Evangelical Lutheran Church of Ann Arbor; later the name, First German Evangelical Bethlehem Church, was adopted and again at a subsequent date it was changed to the present name, Bethlehem Evangelical Church. The church had been served by pastors of the Evangelical Synod since 1877.[2]

Evangelical Church, Michigan Conference

Among the immigrants who came to Michigan from the eastern States were many persons from Pennsylvania who were members of the Evangelical association. In 1838 Rev. Solomon Altimos, who was licensed to preach by the East Pennsylvania Conference in 1833, arrived and settled in Ash Township, Monroe County. He organized an Evangelical congregation at Port Creek the same year and was the first Evangelical minister to preach in Michigan. According to records available, he conducted services at a location near Carleton, Monroe County, in 1838. As a result of his labors, the first Evangelical congregation in Michigan, the Port Creek Evangelical Church, was organized in 1839. Services were conducted from 1839 to 1871 in a schoolhouse, after which the first church building, a frame structure, was erected. The present church building was constructed and dedicated in 1893.[3]

Early Church History

At the sixth session of the Ohio Conference in 1845 it was decided to found two missions, one in the Maumee Valley, a section of which later became part of Michigan, and one near Ann Arbor. Brother Daniel Kern was stationed on the Maumee and Brother George Kaag at the Ann Arbor mission, the latter being the first regularly appointed preacher of the Evangelical association in Michigan. He preached in Lenawee, Monroe, and Washtenaw Counties. He also made several missionary trips to locations in Jackson, Calhoun, and St. Joseph Counties, which finally comprised his circuit.[1]

During one of his travels through the State Bishop John Seybert, the second Evangelical bishop, came to Niles and the surrounding country. He immediately recognized the territory as an excellent community for expansion among his followers. On his return to Pennsylvania, he told of the "extraordinary good land" he had observed in Michigan. These reports induced the brothers Jacob, John, David, and George Rauch to come to Michigan where they settled in Berrien County, in the summer of 1849. Bishop Seybert followed them the same summer and organized a class of worship. At that time he requested Brother J.J. Escher, who was serving as a preacher in charge of the Elkhart circuit in the State of Indiana, to serve Portage Prairie in cooperation with his colleague, Brother Wolf. By 1851 the Elkhart circuit covered a territory extending from Berrien County to Wabash inclusive, and from Kosciusko County, Indiana, on the south to Fort Wayne on the east inclusive, and embraced 24 appointments.[2]

African Methodist Episcopal Church

Michigan witnessed the beginning of the Negro church movement in 1839, when the Colored Methodist Society was organized in Detroit. From this society emanated in 1841 the first African Methodist Episcopal Church in the State, the Bethel Church.[3] The first meetings were held in an old building, located on Cadillac Square, known as Military Hall. This building belonged to the city and was 'granted' by the Common Council to the Colored Methodist Church and removed to the north side of Congress Street near Woodward Avenue. Later, it was removed again to Croghan Street near the northwest corner of Hastings Street. The Society remained there for about 2 years, and on May 10, 1841, was reorganized under the direct control of the African Methodist Episcopal Church. The building was then moved to Fort Street west of Beaubien Street, where it was formally dedicated on June 14, 1842; it was used until the brick church on the south side of Lafayette Street was completed and dedicated on September 19, 1847. This church is now called Bethel African Methodist Episcopal Church and is located on the corner of Frederick and St. Antoine Streets.[1]

Churches of Christ

In 1840 Thomas Hawley, who came to the United States in 1815, moved with his family to Detroit. His home was on Congress Street, between Randolph and Brush Streets. In this home, Mr. Hawley, his wife, son and daughter-in-law with their two children, six in all, began meetings for worship according to apostolic teaching and usage. They were the first representatives of primitive Christianity and the first examples of primitive church worship in Detroit. This was the beginning of what is now the Plum Street Church of Christ, which was the first church of this denomination to be established in Michigan.[2]

In 1842 this little band of disciples was increased by the arrival of William Linn and his family from Scotland. This group, 12 in all, were the charter members of the Plum Street Church of Christ, Detroit.[3]

These disciples continued their meetings in private residences for about a year, during which time they were visited only once by a regular preacher, Mr. A.S. Hayden from Cleveland, Ohio. During these meetings quite a few members joined the group, which made it necessary for them to obtain a larger meeting place. This they did in moving to a small schoolhouse located at Randolph and Congress Streets.[4]

For several years the local habitation of these disciples was somewhat migratory; they finally settled in the Courthouse on Campus Martius, in the spring of 1854.[5] After the Civil War they secured a church building at Fourth and Plum Streets, where they worshipped until 1918, when the congregation moved to its present location at Hamilton and Tuxedo Avenues.[1]

Early Jewish religious activity

Jewish religious history in Michigan is closely associated with the general history of the Jews within the State. Although the first immigration of Jews to the New World began immediately after their expulsion from Spain and Portugal, about the middle of the sixteenth century, the earliest extant records of a Jewish settler in the State of Michigan date back no farther than 1763.[2] However, these records are of a non-religious nature only. The first beginnings of Jewish religious activities manifest themselves in connection with a later immigration which began about 1848.

Most of the early Jewish settlers in Michigan came from Bavaria, Germany. As had been their custom, these Jews organized religious communities, known as "Minyanim" (assemble for prayer), as soon as they could bring together 10 or more adult male members. The Minyanim served as nuclei from which organized congregations later developed.[3]

The first organized congregations, which had sprung up from the Minyanim, were either Orthodox or Conservative. They followed in every detail one or the other of the rituals practiced by the adherents of the Old World synagogues.[4] The Reform temples (Minhag America) are either directly or indirectly offspring of these congregations, which gradually changed the rituals and thus caused a rift between the leaders of the new movement and the faithful upholders of the old ceremonials. While the latter considered these ceremonials as "indispensable to a true fealty of Judaism,"[5] the former adopted more liberal forms of services, compatible with their new environment.

The first Minyan, from which later developed the Congregation Beth El, one of the first in Michigan, was organized through the initiative of Isaac and Sophie Cozens. They arrived in Detroit early in the year 1850 and established their residence near the corner of Congress and St. Antoine Streets. There, a few months later, the first Hebrew religious services were held.[1]

Seventh-day Adventist Church

The first Seventh-day Adventist church to be established in Michigan was organized by James Bates at Jackson, October 15, 1849. In the spring of 1850 Elder J.N. Loughborough became interested in the movement and assisted materially in the work of the new congregation, which was called a "Company."

In October 1855, the "Company" moved to Battle Creek and was put in charge of Elder and Mrs. James White. Mrs. White later became the Prophet of the movement. Some of her works are published in a volume entitled, The Early Writings of Mrs. E.G. White. The original manuscripts by Mrs. White have recently been transferred to the International Headquarters of the denomination at Tacoma Park, District of Columbia.

In June 1863, Mrs. White introduced a health movement to a congregation in Otsego. This movement has become an important phase of the doctrine of the Church.

Elder White and his wife held the first camp meeting of the denomination at Wright, Michigan, September 1, 1868.[2]

Many other church denominations have found support in Michigan since first efforts were made towards establishing ecclesiastical bodies in the territory. Today more than 90 denominations are actively engaged in the propagation of their faith in the State, all of which have come to make up an integral part of Michigan church life.
